MUSIC NOTES

The music for worship today is brought to us by Anna Karla Carreno. Anna Karla is a recent graduate of Washington Adventist University, where she specialized in music composition and trombone. The song she will sing is entitled Holy Spirit, Living Breath of God, a tune that is classified in the new-age hymn cannon. This recently composed hymn is co-written by English hymn author Stuart Townsend and Irish composer and singer Keith Getty.

Upon further research on this tune, the following description can be found from the words of Townsend. He says:

“Critics of modern worship songs often point out how little Trinitarian content there is in today’s writing. And there’s some truth in that. A surprisingly large number address God rather ambiguously as “Lord”, whether they are talking about His creation of the world, His death on a cross, or His indwelling in their hearts!

Others do refer to “Jesus” or “Father”, and as such do more justice to the beautiful breath of the personhood of God. But when it comes to the Holy Spirit in our songs, our understanding of the third Person of the Trinity seems to be worryingly narrow. We sing about Him as if His sole purpose is to liven up our services by turning up when we ask Him to, and give us warm feelings and the occasional spiritual gift...!

This song seeks to point to the central vitality of the Spirit in every area of our lives: applying the word of God to our lives; bearing His multi-faceted fruit in us and thus shaping us into the likeness of Christ; inspiring passion, repentance, unity, intercession, and sacrifice.”
